

For Sharks(MEAL):

Sharks, imagine a product trusted by indigenous cultures for centuries—a plant that heals, nurtures, and sustains. I'm here today to pitch cannabis, not as just another wellness product, but as a plant deeply rooted in history, culture, and tradition. Indigenous communities have long understood its power, using it for medicine, spiritual rituals, and even practical applications like textiles. Today, I'm bringing that knowledge forward in a way that is ethical, sustainable, and profitable.

Cannabis has been used by indigenous groups worldwide for thousands of years. The earliest recorded medicinal use dates back to 2700 BCE in ancient China, where Emperor Shen Nong documented its healing properties. In India, cannabis was considered sacred in the Vedic texts, used in religious ceremonies and as a powerful remedy. Here in the Americas, indigenous communities cultivated hemp for fiber, rope, and medicine. This isn't a trend—it's a legacy that deserves recognition and respect.

What sets my business apart is our commitment to honoring these traditional uses. We source ethically, collaborate with indigenous farmers, and ensure that cultural knowledge is respected rather than exploited. While the cannabis industry is booming, very few companies acknowledge the plant's deep roots. By positioning cannabis as an indigenous innovation, we're not just selling a product—we're telling a story, preserving history, and empowering the communities that have nurtured this knowledge for generations.

So, sharks, I'm offering you a chance to invest in more than just a product—you're investing in history, sustainability, and a movement that honors the true origins of cannabis. Together, we can build a brand that's not only profitable but also ethical and culturally responsible. Who's ready to grow with me?